Hagerman said these medicines can make other behavioral treatments more effective.

If oral intake is poor, intravenous hydration should be given, but the patient should be monitored carefully.

The one exception to this rule is topical nasal sprays and pseudoephedrine.